

Passing Values to Our Children

Think about one message you would like your child(ren) to learn about money, and write it below. It could be about the value of money, its role in our lives, or something practical you would like them to learn.

Now, think about all the ways you can pass this value on in everyday life—it may be things you currently do or you would like to start doing.

Choose one action that you will start with today—it could be the one you think is most important, or the one that is most achievable for you right now.

Think about how you will build in the other actions. You might add in one a week or one a month. Think about how you will review this- perhaps set a date in a months time to sit down with a cup of tea for 10 minutes and look at this piece of paper again!
